

Information sheet 1: SL&RR – more than a program

Sexual Lives and Respectful Relationships (SL&RR) is a community based model of sexuality education, information and activity that brings people with an intellectual disability together with professionals from community organisations to focus on sexuality rights for people with an intellectual disability in their local communities.

There are four parts to the SL&RR model.

1. Peer to peer work on sexuality rights through the peer led sexuality and respectful relationships program
2. Supporting change in support relationships through learning partnerships
3. Developing partnerships between people with intellectual disability and community organisations involved in domestic/family/ sexual violence, women's and community health and disability advocacy
4. Changing the way people think about and support sexuality and relationships in the lives of people with an intellectual disability - policy, practice, and advocacy.
